

Filing Complaints against Notarios and Immigration Consultants

This list is intended as a resource tool and starting point for staff of immigration legal service organizations to identify and contact state Attorneys General offices throughout the United States for purposes of obtaining information on how and where to file a complaint in each state against immigration consultants. For convenience, the term immigration consultant includes notarios, travel agents, and any other person or agency that engages in the unauthorized practice of law (UPL) with respect to providing immigration services. This is not a “how to” guide on filing consumer complaints against immigration consultants. Each state will have its own process for filing consumer complaints against immigration consultants. This list is not legal advice.

This list is updated as of August 4, 2006. Attorneys General and/or their contact information will change. Therefore, you should check the websites of the state Attorneys General to verify the contact information. You should also call their offices in order to verify complaint filing procedures.

Immigration Consultants Take Advantage of Unsuspecting Immigrants

In many states unscrupulous immigration consultants are advertising that they can help people file applications for legalization when in fact there is no law permitting legalization. At the time of publication of this list, the President has not signed a law to legalize the undocumented population in the United States. These immigration consultants are collecting money from unsuspecting immigrants and filing applications with the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) for immigration benefits for which these immigrants are not eligible. The result is that the applications bring the applicants to the attention of the DHS, which in turn places undocumented people in removal proceedings.

Similarly, an immigration consultant might help an immigrant apply for an immigration benefit without first screening to make sure that the foreign national is not barred from applying for the benefit because of some offense that s/he might have committed in the past. Many crimes make immigrants deportable from the United States. If the immigration consultant did not properly screen the applicant before filing the application and the applicant has a criminal record, then the applicant will most likely end up in removal proceedings because the application brought the applicant to the attention of the DHS.

In other situations, an immigration consultant might harm an immigrant not only by engaging in the unauthorized practice of law but also by charging exorbitant fees for such legal services.

Federal law restricts who can “represent” an immigrant before the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) and the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR) immigration courts and Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA).

In the above examples, the immigration consultants engaged in the unauthorized practice of law because they are not authorized to represent immigrants, practice, or prepare cases before the DHS or the immigration courts. See 8 Code of Federal Regulations §§ 292.1 & 1292.1, and §§1.1(i), (j), (k), and (m) and 1001.1(i), (j), (k), and (m). Even if a state law regulates the provision of immigration services, only federal law can authorize who can represent immigrants, who can practice before the DHS and immigration courts, and who can prepare an immigration case (including the study of the facts of a case coupled with the giving of advice). In effect, these regulations govern who can provide immigration legal services to immigrants. If your state has a law that regulates immigration consultants and it appears to conflict with the federal regulations on representation, practice, and preparation, then seek further legal advice on the conflict between the state and federal law.

The Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) is the federal administrative appellate court for immigration law in the United States, and it authorizes six categories of people who can provide representation for immigration purposes. Two common categories are attorneys and accredited representatives. Accredited representatives are non-attorneys who the BIA authorizes to provide immigration legal services.

A non-profit, religious, charitable, social service or similar organization that charges only nominal fees and that has adequate knowledge, information, and experience in immigration law can apply to the BIA to receive recognition to provide immigration legal services. In addition, it can apply to the BIA to obtain accreditation for its staff to provide immigration legal services. Refer to 8 CFR §§292.1, 292.2, 1292.1, and 1292.2 for the federal authority on who can provide immigration legal representation and how charitable, nonprofit agencies can gain recognition and accreditation for their staff to provide immigration legal services.

If you want to verify whether a person (non-attorney) or agency is authorized to provide immigration legal services, then check the website of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR), the umbrella organization that runs the immigration courts in the United States, for the most current list of agencies that are authorized to provide immigration legal services as well as the most current list of people who are accredited by the federal government to provide immigration legal services. The website can be found at: <http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/statspub/raroster.htm> (last visited August 24, 2006).

Why file a complaint with the state consumer protection unit?

If you have a client who has been harmed by an immigration consultant, then your client might be able to file a complaint with the state Attorney General's office or the state Consumer Affairs Office in the state where the immigration consultant is located. The purpose of filing the complaint is not necessarily to get money back from the immigration consultant but to notify the state agency about possible deceptive and unfair business practices by the immigration consultant. If enough complaints are filed about the same immigration consultant, the state agency might take action against the immigration consultant to stop the deceptive or unfair practices.

It is the client's decision to file a consumer complaint

Remember: it is the client's decision as to whether to file a complaint against an immigration consultant. If you decide to assist a client to file a complaint against an immigration consultant, then you should make sure that the client understands the pros and cons of filing such a complaint.

For example, the restrictionist or anti-immigrant sentiment that is apparent in many states might lead some state officials to question whether they should report undocumented people to the federal Department of Homeland Security (DHS). For example, see the article, "Immigration law tests agencies," in the Denver Post July 27, 2006 regarding a new law in Colorado that makes it illegal to give state benefits to undocumented immigrants. The article discusses the headaches that Colorado government agencies expect when revising their rules to serve only U.S. citizens or lawful permanent residents.

Filing Complaints against Notarios and Immigration Consultants

This may not be as much of an issue in states, such as California, New York, and Texas, where there is a sizable immigrant population and where the Attorneys General in those states have made a public effort to go after immigrant consultants, but it might be an issue in other states where state agencies are not as accustomed to dealing with immigrants.

Regardless of which state, however, there is always some potential risk – even if small – when an undocumented person makes herself/himself known to public officials. Therefore, it is always a good idea for you to approach the public official first, without your client, about the issue to see how the public official will deal with the issue. It is a way of “testing the waters” before actually filing a consumer complaint.

Consumer complaint information is often public record

Consumers filing complaints against immigration consultants should also be aware that most states expect the consumer to first contact the business (i.e., the immigration consultant) to resolve the problem. Then if the problem is not resolved the consumer files a complaint with the state agency but explains how s/he tried to resolve the complaint. If your client (i.e., the consumer) is afraid to file a complaint against the immigration consultant or you believe it will be useless to file a complaint against the immigration consultant, then you must explain this in the complaint to the state agency.

For many states, after you file the complaint with the state agency, the agency will contact the business with a copy of the complaint so that the business can respond to the complaint. Therefore, make sure your client understands before filing the consumer complaint that the immigration consultant will most likely receive a copy of the complaint.

Undocumented immigrants should be aware that for many states, at some point in the consumer complaint process, the information provided in the complaint may become public record. That does not mean that the state agency will affirmatively publicize the information. It means that the information can be accessed through state Freedom of Information Act or Public Records Act requests or if there is a request for the information from another government agency.

The state Attorney General is not your client’s private attorney

In general, Attorneys General cannot act as a private attorney for the individual victims of fraud by immigration consultants. The AG’s office or the state Consumer Affairs Office is there to protect the public interests. The AG will look for the public harm that the immigration consultant is doing. Therefore, the AG’s office might be considering more than just the facts of one person’s case. They might be looking for trends or ongoing consumer transactions harming multiple state residents.

To protect the public interest, they might bring lawsuits, on behalf of their states, against immigration consultants for violating laws protecting consumers. They generally do not bring lawsuits to defend the financial interests of an individual but rather to stop illegal practices.

There are many factors that go into whether the AGs’ offices will bring a lawsuit for the public interest, including the following: the severity of the case in terms of economic loss or the number and gravity of law violations; the possibility of halting a fraudulent scheme quickly; the number of consumers involved; the extent to which consumers will benefit from public enforcement; the costs of enforcement as compared to the benefits to the public; and the likelihood of collecting penalties and restitution from the immigration consultant.

Your client should understand that the state agency handling the complaint will most likely not get money back for the client. Instead, the state agency wants to obtain information from complaints about suspected illegal business practices because numerous complaints may allow the state agency to identify frauds and scams and may reveal a pattern of misconduct allowing the state agency to take action.

Be assertive, polite, and persistent with state agencies

The states' Attorneys General exist, in part, to help protect consumers from deceptive and unfair business practices. Generally, they investigate and prosecute violations of the states' Consumer Protection Act or Unfair & Deceptive Trade Practices Act laws. Therefore, the tact you should take when communicating with the state Attorney General's office is that you are helping a consumer who is the victim of deceptive or unfair business practices.

If you are going to help a client file a consumer fraud complaint against an immigration consultant, then you must be clear, when communicating with the state Attorney General's office, that you are filing a consumer complaint against a business for deceptive or unfair business practices. You are not filing a complaint about immigration law or immigration services.

As soon as the staff of many state offices hear the word "immigration," they automatically assume that you are calling about immigration law rather than calling about a consumer complaint. They therefore think that their state office has no jurisdiction to handle a federal immigration issue. They will then try to refer you to the DHS USCIS National Customer Service Center. If this happens to you, be polite but persistent. Make sure that they understand that you are not calling about federal immigration benefits or immigration law but that you are calling to file a complaint with the state agency about deceptive (fraudulent) and unfair business practices, something that is investigated by state agencies, not federal immigration agencies.

If you try to explain that the immigration consultant is engaged in the "unauthorized practice of law," then the state agency staff person might misunderstand and try to refer you to the state bar association because the state bar association has jurisdiction over complaints about legal services. Many state bar associations do not handle complaints about unlicensed immigration consultants because such consultants are not in fact "licensed" to practice law. Very often state bar associations only regulate "licensed" attorneys. Therefore, do not let the state agency staff person refer you to a state bar association unless you are absolutely sure that is the agency with which you should be communicating.

Be aware that in addition to helping your client file a consumer complaint with the Attorney General's office against an immigration consultant, you might be able to help her/him file a complaint with the state bar association against the immigration consultant for engaging in the "unauthorized practice of law." As mentioned above, not all state bar associations consider these types of complaints. For state bar associations that handle these types of complaints, they might come under the jurisdiction of an "Authorized Practice of Law Committee," or an "Unauthorized Practice of Law Committee," or an "Ethics Committee."

File complaints against immigration consultants with other associations too

In addition to filing a complaint against an immigration consultant with the state Attorney General's office, you might consider helping your client file a complaint with the Better Business Bureau (BBB) at <http://www.bbb.org/> (last visited on July 24, 2006), or with the Chamber of Commerce at <http://www.chamberofcommerce.com/> (last visited July 24, 2006) or with other city or county business groups. The reason you would also file complaints with these and other business associations is that such associations track such complaints to provide information to consumers. Therefore, a victim of an unscrupulous immigration consultant who files a complaint with these business associations might be helping some future consumer. Moreover, many complaints against a business, including an immigration consultant, might give the business a bad reputation in the business community – particularly if the complaint is about deceptive practices.

If your client does not want to file a complaint with the state Attorney General's office against an immigration consultant, then consider whether it is feasible for your client to pursue a claim against the immigration consultant in Small Claims Court. If the client is undocumented, however, this might be a risky move.

In addition to filing a consumer complaint, consider the feasibility of filing a crime report with the local police or District Attorney's office, particularly if the immigration consultant has threatened your client.

As mentioned previously, determine whether you can also file a complaint with the "Unauthorized Practice of Law Committee" of the state bar association. The American Bar Association (ABA) has a "Directory of Unlicensed Practice of Law Committees" nationwide that can be accessed at http://www.abanet.org/cpr/clientpro/cp-dir_upl.pdf (last visited August 4, 2006).

File complaints against attorneys or BIA accredited representatives elsewhere

If your client was represented by an attorney or an accredited representative of a Board of Immigration Appeals (BIA) recognized agency, then you would not file a complaint with the state Attorney General. Instead, complaints against attorneys must be filed with the attorneys' states bar associations. In addition to filing a complaint against an attorney at the state bar, you may also file a complaint against an attorney with the Office of General Counsel of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR). You may use Form EOIR-44, Immigration Practitioner Complaint Form. You can access this form at the EOIR website at: <http://www.usdoj.gov/eoir/formslist.htm> (last visited August 3, 2006).

Complaints against first-level or partially accredited representatives (those who represent immigrants exclusively before the DHS) can be filed with the Office of General Counsel of the DHS bureau. There is no specific complaint form to use when filing such a complaint.

Complaints against second-level or fully accredited representatives (those who can represent immigrants before the DHS and before the immigration courts and the BIA) can be filed with the Office of General Counsel of the Executive Office for Immigration Review (EOIR). Because a complaint against a fully accredited representative is filed with EOIR, you may use Form EOIR-44.

You can write a letter to the AG at: Attorney General's Consumer, Information and Mediation Service, 6 State House Station, Augusta, Maine 04333. You can also submit a complaint online at the above website. You can call the Consumer Information and Mediation Service between 9 a.m. and 12 p.m. at 207-626-8849. Unfortunately, their phones are often busy. If their phone is busy, consider submitting the online complaint or sending an E-mail to consumer.mediation@maine.gov. On May 4, 2006, the Governor signed into law Legislative Document (LD) 1996, which became Public Law, Chapter 629, which in turn amended title 4 of the Maine Revised Statutes Annotated (M RSA) to add under Chapter 17

(for Attorneys At Law) and under Subchapter 1 (for Admission to Practice) and under Section 807 (for Unauthorized Practice of Law), a new Section 807-B entitled “Authorized Immigration and Nationality Law Assistance.” At the time of creation of this list, it is unclear whether the Financial Crimes and Civil Rights Division of the AG’s office or the Consumer Division of the AG’s office will enforce this new law. Until it becomes clear which division will enforce this new law, to initiate an investigation into an immigration consultant, you can contact either Leanne Robbin, Chief, Financial Crimes and Civil Rights Division, or Brian MacMaster, Director of Investigations. If you are interested in seeing the text of the new law, visit <http://www.mainelegislature.org/legis/bills/chapters/PUBLIC629.asp> (last visited August 1, 2006).

The Consumer Advocate & Protection Division of the Tennessee Attorney General's Office handles complaints regarding the unauthorized practice of law (UPL) and enforcement under the Tennessee Unauthorized Practice and Improper Conduct statutes, Tenn. Code Ann. § 23-3-101 et seq. Therefore, complaints regarding the unauthorized practice of law by non-attorney immigration consultants or notarios should be made directly to that office. It has an UPL Complaint Form that they send to consumers or attorneys to complete regarding these situations. The best way for a consumer or attorney to contact the office regarding these situations is by telephone at (615) 741-1671 or to go to the website at <http://www.attorneygeneral.state.tn.us/cpro/upl.htm> (last visited July 27, 2006) and click on "complaint form" to print off, complete and mail back to the office. Tennessee also has a statute prohibiting

<http://www.vdacs.virginia.gov/consumers/index.html> (last visited July 26, 2006). You can download a complaint form from this website, complete it, and mail it to Virginia Department of Agriculture and Consumer Services, Office of Consumer Affairs, 102 Governor Street, Richmond, VA 23219. Consumer Protection HOTLINE

Toll free in Virginia: 1.800.552.9963 or 804.786.2042. Fax: 804-225-2666 Monday through Friday, 8:15 am to 5:00 pm. The OCA only handles complaints against businesses. Therefore, if it is an individual who is holding himself or herself out as an “immigration consultant,” it is important that you explain to the OCA that even though the individual is not a legitimate business s/he is holding himself/herself out as a business by offering to provide services to complete forms, etc. If the OCA identifies a pattern of misconduct or wrongdoing, then it will contact the AG’s office.
