The Honorable Jeh Johnson
Department of Homeland Security
Washington, DC 20528

Dear Secretary Johnson:

In coalition with Nepali organizations based in the United States, including Adhikaar in New York, the National Council of Asian Pacific Americans (NCAPA) are a part of a nation-wide movement to support humanitarian efforts for Nepal. The massive 7.8 magnitude earthquake that shook Nepal has resulted in mass death and destruction. This devastation and tragedy has touched all of our hearts as the difficult relief efforts have begun.

NCAPA commends the Obama Administration for contributing to urgent relief efforts in Nepal. While the U.S. is directing much-needed relief aid to Nepal, another significant way we can help limit the strain on that country's resources is by designating Nepal for Temporary Protected Status (TPS) under § 244(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act. In a very similar circumstance, after a massive earthquake in Haiti, the Secretary of Homeland Security acted quickly to designate Haiti for TPS. That response can and should be repeated for Nepal as soon as possible.

Section 244(b)(1)(B) allows for a TPS designation if an environmental disaster, including specifically an earthquake, has caused a substantial temporary disruption of living conditions in the area affected such that the country cannot adequately handle the return of its nationals; and the country has officially requested a TPS designation.

Nepal experienced a 7.8 magnitude earthquake followed by numerous strong aftershocks, some even measuring 6.6 on the Richter scale. Thirty-nine of Nepal's seventy-five districts were affected by the quake – 11 of them severely. The death toll in Nepal has exceeded 5,000 and the expected numbers could be as high as 10,000. Eight million people have already been affected, and the number is expected to grow as aftershocks, avalanches, mudslides and bad weather continue to damage homes, businesses and other vital infrastructure. The government estimates that over 70,000 houses have been destroyed. Over 3,000 schools are located in the 11 most severely affected districts. Up to 90 percent of health facilities in rural areas have been damaged. Hospitals in district capitals, including Kathmandu, are overcrowded and lack medical supplies and capacity. Many temples and heritage sites have collapsed.

The aftermath of the earthquake has left the people of Nepal displaced, homeless, and at risk for disease. The United Nations reported that an estimated 2.8 million people are displaced. Survivors are reported to be living in tents or sleeping in open fields, despite the heavy rains. The need for food, clean water, shelter and fuel is dire. Nepal's famous mountainous structure has made it difficult to provide relief to villages farther away from the capital of Kathmandu. Relief efforts have also been complicated because Kathmandu's airport has only one runway, which suffered damage during the earthquake, and cannot easily accommodate the planes arriving with supplies. The conditions on the ground mean that Nepal is unable to handle the return of nationals at this time. All the energy is on keeping people in Nepal safe and cared for. Given the extensive damage and loss that is already known, and the certainty that those numbers will increase significantly, Nepal clearly meets the necessary requirements for a TPS designation.

TPS is a temporary form of humanitarian aid that will empower Nepalese here in the United States to more effectively aid their own home country during the rebuilding. TPS would ensure that Nepalese in the U.S. would be protected from deportation and granted work authorization to enable them to continue working and send remittances to Nepal. Moreover, the devastation in Nepal and hazardous conditions make it unsafe for any Nepalese nationals to be forced to return to the country at this time. Nepal ranks among the world's poorest countries. The United States has provided aid and support since January 1951, contributing more than $1.4 billion bilaterally and multilaterally. Up to 90 percent of the country's inhabitants earn a living through agriculture, which serves as a significant percentage of the country's gross domestic product. Tourism also serves as a major source of revenue, which will be greatly impacted by the earthquake's devastation as many historical sites have been destroyed. The U.S. Geological Survey estimates that reconstruction costs could exceed $10 billion, or half of national GDP.

Further, in 2006 Nepal ended an armed conflict that plagued the country for over ten years. Over 15,000 people were killed in this conflict, between 100,000 to 150,000 thousand people were internally displaced and thousands of others were disappeared. Since 2006 Nepal has faced a crisis of governance with different political parties leading the government at different times. Nepal currently runs under an Interim Constitution which was written in 2007 and political parties have not yet agreed on a formal constitution. This instability leaves Nepal with limited infrastructure to deal with the crisis created by the earthquake.

In addition to requesting a designation of TPS, we respectfully request that the Department of Homeland Security (DHS) extend other immigration-related relief for Nepalese in the U.S. and abroad. Specifically, we urge DHS to grant humanitarian parole to Nepalese nationals currently in Nepal who have approved I-130 or I-140 petitions but for whom visas are not yet available, and to extend any existing grants of parole to Nepalese nationals already in the U.S. We also ask DHS to expedite processing of immigrant petitions for immediate relatives of U.S. relatives and to expedite adjudication of employment authorization applications, where appropriate. Similarly, DHS should expedite adjudication and approval, where possible, of requests for off-campus employment authorization for Nepalese students with F-1 visas experiencing severe economic hardship.

Therefore, along with the coalition of Nepali organizations, Adhikaar, NCAPA and the 127 undersigned organizations strongly urge you to designate Nepal for Temporary Protected Status and to provide additional immigration-related relief as soon as possible.

Sincerely,

Mini Timmaraju
